...and ambitious enough to think about you in justification of your presence. But whatever you may do, you will not be able to move forward without making a decision. This decision will be based on your perception of the past and your interpretation of the present. You cannot escape the past, but you can shape your future. The past is not destiny, but a guide to the present. It is not a burden to be carried, but a resource to be used. The choice is yours. The past is not something that happens to you, but something that you make happen. You are not a victim of your past, but a creator of your present. You are not defined by your past, but you are defined by your choices. You are not defined by what has happened to you, but what you have made of it. You are not defined by what has happened to you, but what you have made of it. You are not defined by what has happened to you, but what you have made of it. You are not defined by what has happened to you, but what you have made of it. You are not defined by what has happened to you, but what you have made of it. You are not defined by what has happened to you, but what you have made of it.